INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	2
ARGUMENT	3
I. STARE DECISIS REQUIRES THAT THE LAW REMAIN CLEAR AND PREDICTA- BLE. STARE DECISIS IS PARTICULARLY STRONG IN CASES INVOLVING STAT- UTORY INTERPRETATION	3
A. Stare Decisis Protects the Integrity of This Court and Its Jurisprudence.....	3
B. Stare Decisis is Stronger in Statutory Interpretation Cases	5
II. ALL FACTORS THAT THIS COURT EX- AMINES IN DETERMINING WHETHER TO ADHERE TO STARE DECISIS SUPPORT AFFIRMING SOSA 'S EN- DORSEMENT OF FEDERAL COURT JURISDICTION OVER HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS THAT WERE COMMITTED ABROAD	7
A. Sosa 's Precedential "Antiquity" is Strong Because It Incorporated Over Two Decades of Lower Federal Court Juris- prudence, Relied on Eighteenth Century Sources (Including Blackstone), and Because Congress has Taken no Steps to Overrule Sosa	8

B. All Lower Federal Courts Have Relied on Sosa to Exercise Jurisdiction Over ATS Cases Involving Human Rights Abuses That Were Committed Extra-territorially.....	12
1. In seventy-three (out of a total of seventy-seven) reported ATS cases, defendants never even challenged federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights abuses, and federal courts assumed that such jurisdiction was proper.....	13
2. In the four reported opinions (and one unreported opinion) decided after Sosa , where defendants affirmatively challenged federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights abuses, all courts rejected their arguments, citing Sosa as controlling authority.....	22
C. Stare Decisis Requires That All Aspects of Sosa Be Followed Because Sosa Is “Well Reasoned”.....	25
1. Sosa is “well reasoned” because there was a clear majority, and it has not created any confusion.....	25

2. Sosa is “well reasoned” because lower courts have consistently applied its endorsement of federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights abuses	27
3. Sosa is “well reasoned” because its endorsement of federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights abuses has not been criticized by the academic community	28
4. Sosa is “well reasoned” because it was briefed comprehensively.....	30
5. Sosa is “well reasoned” because it accurately interpreted the Alien Tort Statute’s legislative history....	33
CONCLUSION.....	34

INTEREST OF *AMICUS CURIAE*¹

Amicus, the Constitutional Litigation Clinic, has been part of the curriculum of the Rutgers School of Law-Newark since 1970. Its main goals are to successfully represent clients whose most fundamental rights have been violated; to protect and promote civil liberties and human rights; and to train law students (through the medium of impact litigation), to be creative and ethical lawyers of the highest quality.

The Constitutional Litigation is one the oldest legal clinics in the country. It has litigated civil rights and human rights cases of first impression in federal and state courts in this country and throughout the world, including before this Court.

Amicus curiae submits this brief to promote integrity and accuracy in the development of jurisprudence under the Alien Tort Statute, by providing this Court with a comprehensive discussion of the doctrine of stare decisis, and its relevant application to this case. In doing so, amicus curiae seeks to ensure that victims of the most serious abuses will continue to have access to an impartial forum, where they can seek and find justice.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The doctrine of stare decisis gives integrity to this Court as an institution, and strengthens its legitimacy to the public. Stare decisis requires that the law be predictable. It ensures that the law does not change based upon this Court’s composition, and that legal issues are not re-litigated each time they arise in a case. As such, this Court’s decision in Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain, 542 U.S. 692 (2004), in its entirety, should act as stare decisis in Kiobel v. Royal Dutch Petroleum Co., 621 F.3d 111 (2d Cir. 2010), reh’g denied, 642 F.3d 268 (2d Cir. 2011), reh’g en banc denied, 642 F.3d 379 (2d Cir. 2011), cert. granted, 132 S. Ct. 472 (2011), and all future cases brought under the Alien Tort Statute (“ATS”).

In Sosa, this Court endorsed Filartiga v. Pena-Irala, 630 F.2d 876 (2d Cir. 1980). Sosa, 542 U.S. at 731. Both Sosa and Filartiga were ATS lawsuits based on events that occurred outside U.S. borders – in Paraguay and Mexico, respectively. In Sosa, this Court rejected arguments by the United States and over twenty amici that the ATS bars federal courts from hearing lawsuits stemming from human rights abuses committed far from U.S. soil. Since Sosa was decided, over 100 ATS cases have been filed where the alleged human rights abuses took place extraterritorially. In all but five of those cases, federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial torts was not even questioned by any of the parties, or by the federal courts presiding over the cases. In the five cases where defendants did challenge jurisdiction based on extra-territoriality, all federal courts dismissed those challenges, citing Sosa as controlling precedent.

This Court's jurisprudence is clear that stare decisis is particularly strong in cases involving statutory interpretation. Stare decisis controls when the antiquity of the precedent has strengthened its holding, a particular decision has been relied upon, including by lower courts, and when the Court's decision was well-reasoned. Sosa satisfies all of these elements. As such, this Court should adhere to Sosa's unequivocal endorsement of federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights abuses.

ARGUMENT

I. STARE DECISIS* REQUIRES THAT THE LAW REMAIN CLEAR AND PREDICTABLE. STARE DECISIS IS PARTICULARLY STRONG IN CASES INVOLVING STATUTORY INTERPRETATION.

A. Stare Decisis* Protects the Integrity of This Court and Its Jurisprudence.

“The principle of stare decisis and the interests that it serves . . . counsel strongly against reconsideration of precedents.” Seminole Tribe of Fla. v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 63 (1996). Stare decisis

“represents an element of continuity in law, and is rooted in the psychologic need to satisfy reasonable expectations.” Helvering v. Hallock, 309 U.S. 106, 119 (1940). This court adheres to stare decisis because of:

the desirability that the law furnish a clear guide for the conduct of individuals, to enable them to plan their affairs with assurance against untoward surprise; the importance of furthering fair and expeditious adjudication by eliminating the need to relitigate every relevant proposition in every case; and the necessity of maintaining public faith in the judiciary as a source of impersonal and reasoned judgments.

Moragne v. States Marine Lines, Inc., 398 U.S. 375, 403 (1970). Stare decisis “contributes to the integrity of our constitutional system of government, both in appearance and in fact,” by preserving the presumption “that bedrock principles are founded in the law rather than in the proclivities of individuals.” Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. 254, 265-66 (1986).

The only thing that has changed since Sosa was decided in 2004, is the make-up of this Court. That, however, should have no impact on Sosa’s precedential value. As Justice Cardozo famously stated: it would be “intolerable if the weekly changes in the composition of the court were accompanied by changes in its rulings.” Benjamin N. Cardozo, The Nature of the Judicial Process 150 (1921). Moreover,

[t]he labor of judges would be increased almost to the breaking point if every past decision could be reopened in every case, and one could not lay one's own course of bricks on the secure foundation of the courses laid by others who had gone before him.

B. Stare Decisis is Stronger in Statutory Interpretation Cases.

Absent compelling evidence showing that this Court misinterpreted Congress's intent, NLRB v.

² All members of this Court appointed after Sosa was decided expressed respect for precedent and stare decisis during their confirmation hearings. See, e.g., Confirmation Hearing of Chief Justice Roberts Before U.S. S. Judiciary Comm., 109th Cong. 142 (2005) (statement of C.J. Roberts) (“ . . . the Founders appreciated the role of precedent in promoting evenhandedness, predictability, stability, [and] the appearance of integrity in the judicial process.”). Chief Justice Roberts added that an individual Justice's belief that a prior decision was wrongly decided is not enough to overrule precedent. Id. at 144. See also Confirmation Hearing of Justice Alito Before U.S. S. Judiciary Comm., 109th Cong. 318 (2006) (statement of J. Alito) (“the doctrine of stare decisis is . . . a fundamental part of our legal system and it's the principle that courts in general should follow their past precedents.”); Confirmation Hearing of Justice Sotomayor Before U.S. S. Judiciary Comm., 111th Cong. 96 (2009) (statement of J. Sotomayor) (the “basic premise [of stare decisis] is that there is a value in society to predictability, consistency, fairness, [and] evenhandedness in the law.”) Justice Sotomayor explained further that “[s]ociety has the important expectation that judges won't change the law based on a personal whim.” Id.; see also Confirmation Hearing of Justice Kagan Before U.S. S. Judiciary Comm., 111th Cong. 149-50 (2010) (statement of J. Kagan) (stating that stare decisis “leads to predictability and stability in the law” and is “a measure of judicial humility.”).

Longshoremen, 473 U.S. 61, 84, (1985), this Court has held that it must adhere to its prior interpretations of statutes. Neal v. U.S., 516 U.S. 284, 296, (1996). The doctrine of stare decisis is stronger in statutory interpretation cases because “Congress is free to change this Court’s interpretation of its legislation.” Illinois Brick Co. v. Illinois, 431 U.S. 720, 736 (1977). Congress’s failure to do so, signifies agreement with this Court’s statutory interpretation.

Stare decisis is so strong in the statutory interpretation context, that this Court has held that it should adhere to precedent even if a prior decision was “incorrect,” unless the decision is “unworkable.” Patterson v. McLean Credit Union, 491 U.S. 164, 173-74 (1989). A decision is “unworkable” when it poses “a direct obstacle to the realization of important objectives embodied in other laws,” or is causing other problems. Id. For example, in Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos., Inc. v. Dobson, 513 U.S. 265 (1995), this Court found that it had wrongly decided Southland Corp. v. Keating, 465 U.S. 1, 22 (1984) (interpreting § 2 of the Federal Arbitration Act). Nonetheless, it still upheld that decision. Allied-Bruce, 513 U.S. at 272. Stare decisis required upholding Southland because nothing significant had changed since that decision, private parties had likely written contracts relying on Southland, and several subsequent cases had built upon Southland’s reasoning. Id. Despite her strong dissenting opinion in Southland (charging that the majority’s opinion was wrong), Justice O’Connor agreed to uphold Southland, because Southland had “not proved unworkable.” Id. at 284 (O’Connor, J., concurring).

Sosa is not “unworkable.” In all post-Sosa cases, courts have cited to Sosa as binding precedent. In doing so, they either explicitly stated, or assumed, that Sosa authorized federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights abuses. See infra Section II.B. Additionally, Congress has taken no steps to overrule Sosa.

II. ALL FACTORS THAT THIS COURT EXAMINES IN DETERMINING WHETHER TO ADHERE TO STARE DECISIS SUPPORT AFFIRMING SOSA’S ENDORSEMENT OF FEDERAL COURT JURISDICTION OVER HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS THAT WERE COMMITTED ABROAD.

The factors that this Court weighs in deciding whether to adhere to stare decisis include “the antiquity of the precedent, the reliance interests at stake, and of course whether the decision was well reasoned.” Montejo v. Louisiana, 556 U.S. 778, 779 (2009) (citing Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223 (2009)). All of those factors are present here. Accordingly, this Court should rely on all aspects of Sosa as stare decisis in Kiobel, including its endorsement of federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights abuses.

A. Sosa's Precedential "Antiquity" is Strong Because It Incorporated Over Two Decades of Lower Federal Court Jurisprudence, Relied on Eighteenth Century Sources (Including Blackstone), and Because Congress has Taken no Steps to Overrule Sosa.

The "antiquity" of precedent is one of the factors this Court examines in determining whether that precedent should serve as stare decisis in subsequent cases. Montejo, 556 U.S. at 792-93 (citing Pearson, supra, 555 U.S. at 232). "This Court has suggested precedents tend to gain, not lose, respect with age." Jerman v. Carlisle, McNellie, Rini, Kramer & Ulrich LPA, 559 U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 1605, 1611 n.5 (2010). As a case ages, it is "tested by experience." Patterson, 491 U.S. at 174; see also U.S. v. Home Concrete & Supply, LLC, 566 U.S. ___, 132 S. Ct. 1836 (2012). After a decision is tested many times, it either becomes a "bedrock principle[]," deserving strong respect under stare decisis, Vasquez, 474 U.S. at 265, or it is "found to be inconsistent with the sense of justice or with social welfare," and can be overruled. Patterson, 491 U.S. at 174.

To determine an opinion's antiquity in the statutory context, this Court examines:

whether the decisions in question misconstrued the meaning of the statute as revealed in its legislative history, whether overruling these decisions would be inconsistent with more recent expressions of congressional intent . . . whether the decisions in question constituted a departure from prior decisions and whether overruling these decisions would frustrate legitimate reliance on their holdings.

Patsy v. Bd. of Regents of State of Fla., 457 U.S. 496, 501 (1982) (citing Monell v. New York City Dept. of Social Services, 436 U.S. 658, 695-701 (1978)).

Although there is very little legislative history surrounding the ATS's enactment, this Court recognized that the First Congress understood the ATS to encompass torts of an "international character." Sosa, 542 U.S. at 715, 724-25. In fact, this Court cited to Blackstone to find that the early law of nations "regulat[ed] the conduct of individuals situated outside domestic boundaries. . ." Id. at 715 (emphasis added) (citing 4 W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 67 (1769)).

Accordingly, this Court found that, when the First Congress enacted the ATS, "violations of safe conduct were probably understood to be actionable, and individual actions arising out of prize captures and piracy may well have also been contemplated." Sosa, 542 U.S. at 718-20. Blackstone's commentary identified violations of safe conduct and piracy as involving extra-territorial acts. Id. (citing 4 W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 68 (1769)). Violations of safe conduct occur either "upon the sea, or in port within the king's obeisance," and piracy is an "act of hostility upon the high seas." Id. English courts' jurisdiction over extra-territorial violations of the law of nations was a “historical antecedent[.]” to the federal courts’ jurisdictional grant under the ATS in the Founding era. Sosa, 542 U.S. at 732 (citing United States v. Smith, 18 U.S. (5. Wheat.) 153, 163-80 (1820)).

Sosa is nearly a decade old. But its “antiquity” value for stare decisis purposes is much older, as Sosa affirmed Filartiga, which was decided in 1980. Sosa, 542 U.S. at 730, 732. Filartiga cited English common law at the time of our nation’s founding, as well as U.S. case law adopting English common law to find that the ATS had extra-territorial reach.

If A becomes indebted to B, or commits a tort upon his person or upon his personal property in Paris, an action in either case may be maintained against A in England, if he is there found. . . . As to transitory actions, there is not a colour of doubt but that any action which is transitory may be laid in any county in England, though the matter arises beyond the seas.

Filartiga, 630 F.2d at 885 (quoting McKenna v. Fisk, 42 U.S. (1 How.) 241 (1843) (quoting Mostyn v. Fabrigas, 1 Cowp. 161 (1774))).

Since Sosa was decided, it has been interpreted consistently. No federal court has questioned its jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights violations, through the ATS. See infra Section II.B.

Additionally, when Congress takes no action to correct this Court’s interpretation of a statute, this Court's opinion controls future interpretation of the statute's language. See, e.g., Smith v. City of Jackson, 544 U.S. 228, 240 (2005). Here, "Congress has not in any relevant way amended § 1350 or limited civil common law power by another statute." Sosa, 542 U.S. at 724-25. Rather, Congress has acted consistently with this Court's findings that the ATS provides for federal court jurisdiction over human rights abuses committed abroad.

Like this Court did in Sosa, in enacting the TVPA, Congress endorsed Filartiga.

The Filartiga [sic] case met with general approval. At least one Federal judge, however, questioned whether section 1350 can be used by victims of torture committed in foreign nations absent an explicit grant of a cause of action . . . The [Torture Victim Protection Act] would provide such a grant, and would also enhance the remedy already available under section 1350 in an important respect: While the Alien Tort Claims Act provides a remedy to aliens only, the TVPA would extend a civil remedy also to U.S. citizens who may have been tortured abroad.

HOUSE REPORT NO. 102-367(I), reprinted in 1992 U.S.C.C.A.N. 84, 86, 1991 WL 255964 at *3. In enacting the TVPA, Congress created a statute comparable to the ATS for the benefit of American citizens subjected to torture and extra-judicial killing abroad. Sosa, 542 U.S. at 728, 730.

In analyzing Sosa's antiquity (and precedential value), it is significant that Congress has not amended either the TVPA or the ATS after Sosa. This inaction carries "special force" because, in the "area of statutory interpretation, . . . unlike in the context of constitutional interpretation, the legislative power is implicated, and Congress remains free to alter what [this Court has] done." Patterson, 491 U.S. at 172-73.

B. All Lower Federal Courts Have Relied on Sosa to Exercise Jurisdiction Over ATS Cases Involving Human Rights Abuses That Were Committed Extraterritorially.

"Stare decisis has added force when the legislature, in the public sphere, and citizens, in the private realm, have acted in reliance on a previous decision." Hilton v. S. Carolina Pub. Railways Comm'n, 502 U.S. 197, 202 (1991). As acknowledged by this Court in Sosa, Congress has relied fully on Filartiga's holding that federal courts have jurisdiction over human rights abuses that occur abroad, and enacted supplemental legislation, for the benefit of American citizens, that closely mirrors the ATS. Sosa, 542 U.S. at 728, 730; see also supra, Section II.A.

Another way that this Court measures "reliance" for stare decisis purposes is the degree to which lower federal courts have relied on or cited to the decision in question. Allen v. Hardy, 478 U.S. 255, 260 (1986) (examining reliance by "prosecutors, trial judges, and appellate courts throughout our state and federal system,” and “lower courts” generally, on Supreme Court precedent). See also Leegin Creative Leather Products, Inc. v. PSKS, Inc., 551 U.S. 877, 918 (2007) (Breyer, J., dissenting) (“[A] Westlaw search shows that [the decision before the court] has been cited dozens of times in this Court and hundreds of times in lower courts. Those who wish this Court to change so well-established a legal precedent bear a heavy burden of proof.”).

Since this Court decided Sosa in 2004, there have been a total of seventy-seven reported ATS cases (and twenty-five unreported cases) where the underlying tortious conduct occurred extra-territorially. Even though some of those cases were dismissed, no court took adverse action simply because the alleged abuses took place on foreign soil. Even the Second Circuit Court of Appeals, in Kiobel, et al. v. Royal Dutch Petroleum Co., et al., 621 F.3d 111 (2d Cir. 2010), assumed that it had jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights abuses under the ATS.

- 1. In seventy-three (out of a total of seventy-seven) reported ATS cases, defendants never even challenged federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights abuses, and federal courts assumed that such jurisdiction was proper.

In seventy-three reported ATS cases, decided after Sosa, all parties, and federal courts presiding over those cases, assumed that U.S. courts had jurisdiction over human rights abuses committed abroad. See Abagninin v. AMVAC Chemical Corp., 545 F.3d 733 (9th Cir. 2008) (allegations of deliberate distribution of highly toxic pesticides in Ivory Coast); *Abdullahi v. 2. In the four reported opinions (and one unreported opinion) decided after Sosa, where defendants affirmatively challenged federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights abuses, all courts rejected their arguments, citing Sosa as controlling authority.

In the four reported ATS opinions where defendants affirmatively challenged federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial torts, courts have cited to Sosa to deny those challenges. For example, in the child labor lawsuit Flomo v. Firestone Natural Rubber Co., LLC, 643 F.3d 1013, 1015 (7th Cir. 2011), Judge Posner summarily rejected Firestone’s jurisdictional challenge over events that took place in Liberia. He found that Sosa was “a case of non-maritime extra-territorial conduct.” Id. at 1025. Citing Sosa, he also held that “[c]ourts have been applying the [ATS] statute extra-territorially (and not just to violations at sea) since the beginning,” and “no court . . . has ever held that it doesn’t apply extra-territorially.” Id.

In Sarei v. Rio Tinto, PLC, Papua New Guinea residents sued alleging genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes, and racial discrimination. 671 F.3d 736, 743 (9th Cir. 2011) (en banc). In finding that extra-territorial abuses were actionable under the ATS, the court cited Sosa and held that the 1789 Congress “had overseas conduct in mind” when it drafted the ATS. Id. at 745, 747.

Similarly, citing Sosa, the Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, in Doe v. Exxon Mobil Corp., held that it had jurisdiction over human rights abuses committed in Indonesia. 654 F.3d 11, 26 (D.C. Cir. 2011). The court held that “two modern developments convince us that it is entirely appropriate to permit appellants to proceed with their . . . claims even though much of the [defendants’] conduct . . . occurred in Indonesia.” Id. First, although the United States argued in Sosa that the ATS did not apply to torts committed outside the United States, “no Justice indicated agreement with the United States’ position.” Id. And second, in enacting the TVPA, Congress endorsed the line of “modern ATS litigation [that] has primarily focused on atrocities committed in foreign countries . . . [and also] endorsed federal courts’ exercise of jurisdiction over such lawsuits.” Id.

In Bowoto v. Chevron Corp., 557 F. Supp. 2d 1080 (N.D. Cal. 2008), even though the Court partially granted Chevron’s summary judgment motion, id. at 1095-96, it completely rejected the defendants’ argument that ATS did not have reach over events that took place in Nigeria. Id. at 1088. The court noted that other federal courts “have consistently permitted the extra-territorial application of the ATS to non-U.S. nationals, provided the claims are brought under a sufficiently definite and universal norm of international law, as required by Sosa.” Id.

Lev v. Arab Bank, PLC, is the sole unpublished ATS case that explicitly addresses federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights violations.

No. 08-CV-3251(NG)(VVP), 2010 WL 623636, at *1 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 29, 2010) (events occurred in Gaza strip). In denying the defendant’s motion to dismiss, the district court held that “in citing Filartiga and Kadic, the Supreme Court in Sosa made no reference to any limitation on the jurisdiction of courts to hear claims under the ATS which might arise from the extra-territoriality of the actions or the parties.” Id. at *3.

Federal court jurisdiction over ATS claims involving extra-territorial torts is so well-established that it has spawned some unusual decisions. See, e.g., Velez v. Sanchez, 754 F. Supp. 2d 488 (E.D.N.Y. 2010) (U.S.-based ATS case where plaintiff alleged that she had been trafficked into the United States from Ecuador and forced to work as a maid). Citing Sosa, the district court dismissed the case, declaring that “the expanded role for the ATS has always been understood as covering torts committed abroad.”⁴

As these lengthy citations demonstrate, all federal courts have relied on Sosa as unequivocally endorsing federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights abuses. This strengthens Sosa’s precedential value.

⁴ Magnifico v. Villanueva, 783 F. Supp. 2d 1217, 1221-22 (S.D. Fla. 2011) (allowing U.S.-based human trafficking suit to proceed), subsequently explicitly rejected Velez’s holding. Citing to Sosa, the district court held that the statute “grants jurisdiction for torts committed both inside and outside of the United States.” Id.

C. Stare Decisis Requires That All Aspects of Sosa Be Followed Because Sosa Is “Well Reasoned.”

To determine whether a prior decision is “well reasoned” for stare decisis purposes, this Court examines several factors, including: whether there was a clear majority in a particular opinion, whether lower courts followed the decision consistently, whether the decision was criticized, whether the case was comprehensively briefed, and whether the Court’s legislative interpretation was accurate. According to these factors, Sosa, in its entirety, is “well reasoned.”

1. Sosa is “well reasoned” because there was a clear majority, and it has not created any confusion.

When members of this Court are in agreement, an opinion is considered well reasoned. An opinion is not considered well reasoned if the split of the Court was of “the narrowest margins, [with] . . . spirited dissents challenging the basic underpinnings of those decisions.” Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808, 829 (1991). Such divided opinions confuse lower courts and call into question a decision’s holding and application. Seminole Tribe of Fla., 517 U.S. at 63-64.

Sosa was a clear majority opinion with no dissent. Sosa’s interpretation of the ATS and its extra-territorial reach was supported by seven members of this Court. Although there were three concurrences, two of them are inconsequential for purposes of this discussion. Justice Ginsburg's concurrence discusses issues related to the Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA), which is a different statute than the ATS. Sosa, 542 U.S. at 751-60 (Ginsburg, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). Justice Breyer's concurrence supports the majority's opinion in full, but emphasizes that the allegations in Sosa did not rise to the level of abuse that nations of the world have universally agreed to eradicate (such as piracy). Id. at 760-61 (Breyer, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment).

The only concurrence that challenges the majority's core holding is Justice Scalia's, which was joined by Justice Thomas. The thrust of that concurrence is that the majority exceeded its judicial authority in finding that the ATS created a cause of action, in violation of Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins. Sosa, 542 U.S. at 740-41 (citing Erie R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938)) (Scalia, J., concurring and concurring in the judgment). Although Justice Scalia takes issue with the majority's holding concerning the ATS's extra-territorial reach, he does so only in a few paragraphs within his eleven page concurrence. Sosa, 542 U.S. at 746, 750 (Scalia, J., concurring and concurring in the judgment).

Notably, the Sosa majority opinion refutes all of Justice Scalia's charges, including his interpretation of Erie. Id. at 726-35. And Justice Scalia's concurrence has not been adopted by any lower federal court, including the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in Kiobel. Thus, Sosa is not the kind of narrow decision that has caused confusion among lower courts in any way that would diminish its value as stare decisis in future ATS cases.

2. Sosa is “well reasoned” because lower courts have consistently applied its endorsement of federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights abuses.

An opinion is considered well reasoned when lower courts apply the decision in a consistent fashion. Payne, 501 U.S. at 830. When lower courts consistently defy a decision, its precedential value diminishes. Id. If subsequent similar cases “undermined the doctrinal underpinnings,” of the original opinion, stare decisis does not have as much weight. Dickerson v. U.S., 530 U.S. 428, 443 (2000).

As discussed thoroughly in section II.B supra, all lower federal courts have cited to Sosa consistently in dismissing jurisdictional challenges over human rights abuses committed abroad. Over 100 lower federal court decisions decided since 2004 have relied on Sosa as precedent in exercising jurisdiction over human rights cases involving extra-territorial abuses.

3. Sosa is “well reasoned” because its endorsement of federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights abuses has not been criticized by the academic community.

Criticism from the academic community and foreign courts can signify that this Court’s prior opinion was not well reasoned. For example, in Continental T.V., Inc. v. GTE Sylvania Inc., this Court overturned precedent because of academic criticism. 433 U.S. 36, 48-49 (1977). In overruling United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365 (1967), this Court noted that Schwinn had been “the subject of continuing controversy and confusion, both in the scholarly journals and in the federal court.” Id. at 48. Similarly, in Lawrence v. Texas, this Court considered international legal decisions in deciding to overrule Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186 (1986). 539 U.S. 558, 576 (2003). Justice Kennedy “noted that the reasoning and holding in Bowers has been rejected elsewhere,” including by the European Court of Human Rights. Id.

This Court’s endorsement of federal court jurisdiction over extra-territorial human rights violations has not been questioned or criticized by the academic community in any of fifty-four law review articles written about Sosa.⁵ Only a handful of articles criticize Sosa, but none do for its discussion of the ATS's extra-territorial reach. 4. Sosa is “well reasoned” because it was briefed comprehensively.

This Court, in determining whether one of its prior opinions was well reasoned, also considers the level and quality of briefing and argument in the original case. Pearson, 555 U.S. at 239-41. Specifically, this Court “feels less constrained to follow precedent where . . . the opinion was rendered without full briefing or argument.” Hohn v. U.S., 524 U.S. 236, 251 (1998).

In Sosa this Court received comprehensive briefing on the multiple issues that the Court was considering. It received twelve briefs by the parties, and over twenty amicus briefs representing dozens of academics, human rights advocates, religious groups, Alien Tort Claims Act, 28 Loy. L.A. Int'l & Comp. L. Rev. 393 (2006). The rest of the criticism of Sosa on this point is expressed in five law student notes. See Jillian David D. Christensen, Note, Corporate Liability for Overseas Human Rights Abuses: The Alien Tort Statute After Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain, 62 Wash & Lee L. Rev. 1219 (2005); Laura A. Cisneros, Case Note, Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain – Restricting Access to U.S. Courts Under the Federal Tort Claims Act and the Alien Tort Statute: Reversing the Trend, 6 Loy. J. Pub. Int. business organizations, and even foreign nations. The level of legal analysis in the Sosa briefs was detailed and exhaustive. Given that Sosa was the first human rights case to be considered by this Court, the briefs were all of the highest quality imaginable.

Relevant to this brief, is the U.S.'s argument, as respondent, that applying the ATS to extra-territorial acts would be improper and "incompatible with the presumption against extra-territoriality. . . ." Reply Brief for the United States as Respondent Supporting Petitioner, 2003 U.S. Briefs 339 at 19-20. Five separate briefs (representing twenty-one amici), were submitted in support of that position, specifically arguing that the ATS did not authorize our federal courts to hear claims that take place outside our borders. Those briefs were from: the governments of Australia, Switzerland and the United Kingdom;¹⁰ ten organizations (National Foreign Trade Council, USA Engage, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, the United States Council for International Business, the International Chamber of Commerce, the Organization for International Investment, the Business Roundtable, the American Petroleum Institute, and the US-ASEAN Business Council, and the National Association of Manufacturers); the National Association of Manufacturers;¹¹ the Pacific Legal Foundation; and seven law professors (Samuel Estreicher, John C. Harrison, John O. McGinnis, Michael D. Ramsey, Paul B. Stephan, Ruth Wedgwood, and Mark Weisburd).¹²

This Court also considered briefs from amici of the petitioner, taking the opposite position (i.e., that the ATS grants jurisdiction to federal courts to adjudicate human rights claims, even those committed abroad). Among the signatories of those briefs were: the Center for Justice and Accountability, the National Consortium of Torture Treatment Programs, the World Jewish Congress and the American Jewish Committee, law professors, human rights and religious organizations, and families of the victims of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks.¹³

The European Commission, on behalf of neither party, also contributed considerable discussion to this issue.¹⁴

¹¹ The National Association of Manufacturers submitted two amicus briefs; one individually, and one as part of a group.

¹² Author's LEXIS and Westlaw searches of the briefs filed in Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain, 542 U.S. 692 (2003) (LEXIS citation 2003 U.S. Briefs 339 (2004)).

¹³ Author's LEXIS and Westlaw searches of the briefs filed in Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain, 542 U.S. 692 (2003) (LEXIS citation 2003 U.S. Briefs 339 (2004)).

¹⁴ Brief of Amicus Curiae the European Commission in Support of Neither Party, 339 U.S. Briefs 339 (2004). The European Commission argued that ATS jurisdiction existed only over violations of peremptory norms sufficient to confer universal jurisdiction. Id.

Thus, in deciding Sosa, this Court had access to multiple perspectives from prominent amici from around the world. The Court considered and very consciously rejected the U.S.'s (and its amici's) position that the ATS does not contemplate federal court jurisdiction for extra-territorial human rights abuses. Doe, supra, 654 F.3d at 26. Additionally, it clearly and explicitly endorsed Filartiga's findings on extra-territoriality. Sosa, 542 U.S. at 724-25, 731.¹⁵ As such, Sosa is well reasoned, and should serve as stare decisis in Kiobel and subsequent ATS cases.

5. Sosa is “well reasoned” because it accurately interpreted the Alien Tort Statute’s legislative history.

Another factor that determines whether precedent is “well reasoned” is whether this Court accurately interpreted a statute’s legislative history. Patsy, 457 U.S. at 501 (1982) (citing Monell, 436 U.S. at 659-701 (1978)).

As discussed more thoroughly supra in Sections II.A and II.C.4, this Court explored in great detail the ATS’s very limited legislative history. See Sosa, 542 U.S. at 712-25.

In its efforts to determine Congress’s intent in enacting the ATS, this Court looked to Blackstone, and also examined Eighteenth Century Congressional legislative practices. See Sosa, 542 U.S. at 712-25, 737. Additionally, this Court examined Congress's more recent endorsement of the ATS and Filartiga in enacting the TVPA in 1991. Id. at 728. Finally, this Court considered over twenty amicus briefs, many of which discussed the ATS's legislative history.

This Court's meticulous attention to every source of the ATS's legislative history, demonstrates that Sosa was a well reasoned opinion for stare decisis purposes.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Sosa, in its entirety, should serve as stare decisis for Kiobel and all future ATS cases. In particular, in this case, the Court should apply Sosa's holding that the ATS provides federal court jurisdiction for human rights abuses that are committed abroad.

Respectfully submitted,
